

building as those of the Library Company, and under the care of the same librarian. Books may be taken out of the Loganian Library without charge by any person who leaves a deposit of double their value as security. The library is absolutely free.

Additions have also been made to the library by its association, in 1769, with the Union Library Company of Philadelphia, under an act of the legislature, approved on the thirteenth day of March of that year, to which reference is craved; in 1771, with the Associated Library Company and the Amicable Company; by a bequest, in the year 1804, by John Bleakley and the Rev. Samuel Preston; by the bequest, in the year 1827, of the Mackenzie Library; and by numerous other gifts and bequests of books from time to time, none of them very large, but together forming a valuable collection which for nearly one hundred and fifty years has been freely open to the citizens of Philadelphia.

The number of books thus belonging to the complainants now exceeds one hundred thousand volumes.

IV. The corporation is composed of members, and is maintained by their annual contributions, and from the income derived from such property as has been given to it, and from fees paid for the use of the books from persons not members.

All the profits and income of the corporation, after defraying the necessary expenses of maintenance, are applied to the purchase of books. The institution is managed by twelve directors, annually chosen by the members, who receive no compensation for their services, and the use of the books is given—

1. Without charge or compensation to all persons using them within the library building;

2. To all members, with certain usual limitations as to the number of volumes that may at any time be taken for use without the building;
