Gift of John A. McAllister; forms part of the McAllister Collection.

Processing Information

Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, General Assembly Records collection was formerly filed within the large and chronologically-arranged McAllister Manuscript Collection. The papers were separated, arranged, and described as a single collection in 2005, under grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities and the William Penn Foundation. The collection was processed by Sandra Markham and Louise Beardwood. Any views, findings, conclusions or recommendations expressed in this finding aid do not necessarily represent those of the National Endowment for the Humanities.

The Pennsylvania State Archives (of the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission) holds three groups of public records which relate to those in the McAllister Collection: Records Series 7.3, Records of the General Assembly, Petitions and Miscellaneous Records, 1776-1790 (3 boxes), containing petitions submitted to the first unicameral General Assembly by citizens of the Commonwealth; Records Series 7.11, House of Representatives File, 1790-1903 (66 boxes), containing petitions, reports, bills, and amendments introduced into the House of Representatives; and Records Series 7.78, Senate File, 1823-1972 (312 cartons), containing petitions and bills placed before the Senate. Further information on these and other state records can be found at the PHMC website:

Biographical/Historical Notes

The first capital of the Province of Pennsylvania was established by William Penn at Upland on the Delaware River, a settlement which Penn renamed Chester in 1682. The following year, the Provincial Government met in Philadelphia, and remained there for more than a century. The first permanent location for the legislature meetings was the State House (now known as Independence Hall), built between 1732 and 1756. At the close of the American Revolution, westward settlement began in earnest, and thoughts of a more centrally located state capital, preferably in the Susquehanna Valley, soon followed. Acreage on the Susquehanna River was offered to the legislature by John Harris in 1784 and seriously considered for the next few years, but a competitor, the already established city of Lancaster, won the vote when the regular outbreaks of Yellow Fever in Philadelphia helped to push the issue of immediate departure from that city. Lancaster became the temporary capital on the first Monday of November 1799. Proposals and plans for moving further west began to circulate almost immediately, and by 1810 the legislature had considered Northumberland, Bellefonte, Columbia, Carlisle, Reading and Sunbury, in addition to Lancaster, as potential sites. In early 1810, however, they settled on what had, by then, become Harrisburg, due to its location on the Susquehanna and its relative proximity to Philadelphia.

The following description of the government structure is from the Pennsylvania State Archives website: The legislative power of the Commonwealth is vested in the General Assembly. Consisting of the Senate and the House of Representatives, the General Assembly has the authority to enact laws, appropriate funds, and levy taxes. It also possesses the power to propose constitutional amendments, impeach public officials, conduct investigations, and confirm certain executive appointments. The first General Assembly was a unicameral body established under the Constitution of 1776 and possessed broad powers that enabled it to dominate the executive and judicial branches of government. This imbalance was corrected with the Constitution of 1790 that created a bicameral assembly and provided for a popularly elected governor.

Collection Overview

The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania General Assembly Records are divided into two series: Series I, Correspondence and Documents; and Series II, Petitions, Remonstrance, and Memorials. Series I holds a wide variety of letters, depositions, reports, requests, and resolutions that were presented to the Pennsylvania Senate and House of Representatives. Series II has only petitions and remonstrance which were also presented to the legislature, but because of their particular genre and format these documents were separated out and kept together.

The records in both series are generally (but not precisely) filed in chronological order, preserving an arrangement most likely imposed when the entire McAllister manuscript collection was formally accessioned by the Library Company at the turn of the twentieth century. Prior to 2005, all manuscript material had been combined, interfiled, and arranged in chronological order. The full collection spanned two centuries and included the records and correspondence of merchants, corporations, banks, clergymen, and statesmen. When the chronological order was established, earlier-dated documents that had been attached to cover letters were removed and filed under their individual dates of creation. No attempt was made to reconnect these documents when the Commonwealth records were separated out from the general McAllister manuscripts in 2005 and described as a single collection. Therefore, readers finding a cover letter, or a document with a number or letter in the docketing area, are advised to survey the box and folder list for material with a similar subject or theme to find items that may have once been presented to the legislature as a group. One important example is the document titled "List of documents delivered with the governor's speech" (7313.F.59), which was annotated by the clerk of the Senate on December 28, 1790, and had been created to record the attachments to the transcript of Mifflin's presentation to the legislature on December 21, 1790 (the transcript itself is filed out of order at 7314.F.13). Because each of the attachments had dates spanning August through December 1790, most of the documents are now in files that precede the list. Readers are also encouraged to peruse the finding aid for the McAllister Miscellaneous Manuscripts (McA MSS 025) in case some of the material that has remained there might have a relationship to the documents in the General Assembly collection, and was not recognized when the collections were processed.

As with the chronological filing system, the numbering system for these documents remains as it was imposed in the late 1890s: the four-digit number (i.e. 7334) represents a former box number, and the sub-number represents the assigned document number (which includes an .F for folio). Together, they make a unique identification number for each document, and should be employed by readers when filling out call slips; i.e. McA MSS 017 folder 7334.F.35 would request a petition promoting the incorporation of Harrisburg. Document numbers absent from this finding aid are now in held other McAllister manuscript collections.

The provenance of the papers in this collection is unclear. Though they predate record groups held in the Pennsylvania State Archives, the McAllister Collection material does not comprise the full archival record of the Assembly from those earlier periods.

Series I, Correspondence and Documents (1788-1849) primarily holds letters and reports submitted to the state Senate and House of Representatives. The material dating prior to December 1796 was filed with the Senate, and that afterward was mostly filed with the House of Representatives. Generally, the material was officially docketed, dated, and filed with a clerk after being read into the legislative record.

Some of the earliest items in the collection are letters sent to the legislature from Governor Thomas Mifflin (1744-1800, served 1790-1799); many are simply formal messages notifying the legislators of acts that he had approved. Mifflin also kept the Assembly apprised of acts passed by the federal government, such as the creation of the Bank of the United States in 1791 (7315.F.7). Also on file in 1790 and 1791 are several documents that relate to the visit of the Seneca Indian Chiefs, including the noted diplomat Cornplanter (1732?-1836), to Philadelphia, and to Robert King's journey to the Seneca Nation in July 1790, where he presented dispatches from Governor Mifflin respecting the murder of two Seneca tribesmen by the Walker brothers and Samuel Doyle at Pine Creek in June 1790.

The reports in the series were either specifically requested by the Assembly or were filed as required by an act passed to create a company; this is particularly true of the many financial accountings filed by transportation agencies. For example, in late 1820 there are accounts presented by the companies established to create the Stoystown and Greensburg, the Perkiomen and Reading, the Bridgewater and Wilkesbarre [sic], the Belmont and Easton, the Milford and Owego, the Bedford and Stoystown, and the Harrisburg, Carlisle and Chambersburg turnpikes. Another detailed financial accounting was filed in October 1835 for six months expenses of the Allegheny Portage Railroad. A technological wonder, this thirty-six-mile-long line, with its innovative system of ten inclined planes (five up the mountains and five down), runs of flat tracks, and a nine-hundred-foot tunnel (the first carved out for a railway in the United States), was the first to cross the Allegheny Mountains and to connect the existing railroads and canals that enabled freight and passengers to travel from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh. Also in the series are annual reports of expenditures made by various state offices such as that of the treasurer, surveyor general, auditor general, and the land office. As another example, upon the Assembly's request, several counties filed in 1814 abstracts of annual arbitration proceedings and trials in their localities. Institutions such as the University of Pennsylvania (1790-1811) and Pennsylvania Hospital (1808) also filed financial records with the legislature.

Present throughout the series are applications from citizens seeking official positions as door keeper, sergeant-at-arms, or government printer; applicants for the latter appointment either offered to issue state publications in English or German. There is a letter from William Musgrave seeking to be the state librarian in 1816 (7354.F.63). He did not win the position then but did in 1819, and held the job through 1832. Conversely, there are a number of depositions filed between 1805 and 1812 with the Assembly by citizens seeking to oust local judges.

Five folders hold the Senate journal in manuscript, recording the minutes of daily actions in the period December 1791 through April 1792. Similar diaries exist for the House for select days in the period 1821-1823. Another type of record in the series is a list of officers of the Senate with their home addresses in 1829-1830 (7370.F.8); it is inscribed "500 copies" suggesting that it was intended for a printer.

The material in Series I is entirely in manuscript except for two printed items: a pardon of William Jackson, signed by Simon Snyder and dated September 16, 1816 (7355.F.64), and a copy of an 1825 act to appoint a board of Canal Commissioners (7366.F.61). The latter is a printed document which was pasted into booklet, then annotated and corrected in manuscript to become the true copy filed with the Secretary's Office in Harrisburg.

Series II Petitions, Remonstrance, and Memorials (1783-1859) were presented to the General Assembly of the Commonwealth, and are addressed in nearly the same language each time: "To the Honorable the House of Representatives and the Senate of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in session assembled...." By definition, a petition is an earnest formal request made to an official person or organized body, usually in favor of change. A remonstrance is an earnest presentation of reasons for opposition or grievance. The documents are filed in chronological order, and have been listed with the filing citizens' county (or the individual's name), a précis of their appeal, and a date. The arrangement of the petitions creates a catalog of the important issues of the time, and as well as the spread of people, government, and transportation networks across the state of Pennsylvania.

The needs of the citizens were varied, but most had to do with the encouragement of public improvements (and occasionally, with the discouragement or protest of same) including new or repaired bridges, roads, canals, and dams. Residents also appealed for a local river or creek to be declared a "public highway" to ensure free movement to all and prevent obstruction by private citizens. A group of history-minded Philadelphia County citizens even petitioned in 1811 for the erection of an archives building next to Independence Hall to hold government records (7343.F.27).

Another prominent topic was the division and creation of counties (again, cases were made both for and against) as settlement increased across the state, and residents sought representation through local government; all these appeals are described in this finding aid as being for or against "new county." The citizens' reasons vary, but were mainly for purposes of making local government more local. However, a group of inhabitants of Cumberland County petitioned in 1822 to be annexed to Perry County first for tax relief, but also because they preferred not to reside in a county whose name "savors something of Royalty, being taken from the Duke of Cumberland in England, which your petitioners deem to be repugnant to the principles of our republican government." Judicial reform was also a popular appeal; it encompassed the movement of courthouses from one village to another or the removal of a judge for corruption or dereliction of duty. Citizens regularly petitioned as well for a change of venue for elections. Some wanted just to move a polling place from one particular tavern or house to another. Some wanted to create smaller districts when their polling place was too distant from their settlement. All of the varieties of polling matters are described in this list under the general term "for new election district."

Requests for the incorporation of organizations, companies, and banks, and for the holding of lotteries, particularly for churches and schools, were regularly filed. Concerns were raised on behalf of the poor and poorhouses, and for and against fish dams, taxing dogs, markets and auctions for weighing and regulating goods, including alcoholic beverages and their suppliers.

While the overwhelming majority of documents were signed by groups of people, the petitioners were also sometimes individuals. A number of military veterans of the American Revolution, or their widows and children (and a smattering of siblings), wrote to ask for "relief" in the form of a pension, donation lands, or other types of aid; most describe the veteran's terms of service, as well as injuries received during the war. All of these pleas are described in this finding aid under the general term "for veteran's benefit." Other individual citizens were petitioning the Assembly for public appointment, for debtor's relief, or for a contract to supply the state with services.

Individuals also brought intimate issues before the General Assembly: on file are several appeals, from both men and women, for divorce or annulment of marriage, ranging in date from 1808 through the 1830s. As might be expected, those files contain compelling personal narratives as well as character endorsement from neighbors and family members. Two examples show the wide variety of these appeals, which came from all parts of the social spectrum. The first, from Adams County resident John Smith, was filed in October 1811 (7344.F.47). Smith's wife had delivered a baby girl which, in Smith's words, "to the surprise and Mortification of your Petitioner is a Mulatto." The file holds statements from various parties attesting to the paternity of the child, whose father was a servant, "a Negro man of the Neighborhood where she [John Smith's wife] had formerly lived." The second example was filed in 1831 by the great-great-granddaughter of Philip Livingston (1716-1778, and a signer of the Declaration of Independence) (papers held in two files, 7370.F.84 and 7372.F.65). Catherine Louisa Livingston Welsh wrote from Paris to state that at the age of sixteen, and against the wishes of her father, she had married John Welsh, a British citizen who was then a resident of Philadelphia. The petitioners, including her mother (in London) and her father (in Jamaica), attest that Catherine had never lived with her husband, that she "has long since manifested the utmost regret and repentance for the unfortunate act into which she was persuaded," in addition to which she had been in social seclusion since the marriage while Welsh had "long been living in open adultery" in England.

Aside from their personal and local concerns, some of the commonwealth's petitioners were acting in favor of or against national, and even international, issues. Again, these concerns vary widely: in 1838, residents of York and Bucks counties remonstrated against the annexation of Texas; in 1847, the women of Philadelphia County petitioned to abolish the death penalty; and in 1817, a citizen, T.N. Newton, petitioned for several laws including one which would enable women to vote. There is one undated petition (7386.F.8) from a group of Philadelphia merchants to Thomas Jefferson regarding the shipment of goods on the River Plate (Río de la Plata) in South America.

The petitions were primarily handwritten, usually by a scrivener, though a few were printed; the latter are indicated by an * [asterisk] after the folder number. A few of the petitions are still bound by their original ribbons: examples can be seen in folders 7334.F.4 and F.6, and in 7357.F. 55. A small number of the documents include watercolor maps or diagrams of areas discussed; examples can be found in folders 7314.F.39 and in 7334.F.4 and F.6.

Dates appearing in the far right column of the box and folder list come from various places on the document, but are primarily the docket date, the date when the petition was filed with the clerk or read to the Assembly. Very few of the petitions were dated when composed and their length of time in circulation prior to filing with the legislature is unknown. In addition, many of the files, particularly those appealing for divorce, include a variety of documents with wide date spans. In some of those cases, only a year will appear in the box list.
