

and joyful memory. Death had not then yet crossed the threshold of the dear old paternal home. -

There was also a lovely small room front - which was in Gray and Crimson.

The second story rooms were like in shape to the rooms above - but with higher windows and ceilings, and were beautifully furnished - the walls and woodwork being white and gold.

The third story room of the back-buildings, was fitted for a Billiard and Bagatelle Room, which was a source of much pleasure.

— The Veranda. —

The side windows of the front and back parlors opened out on this tiled Veranda overlooking the lovely garden filled with flowers. It was a most delightful retreat in summer, especially on moonlight nights, when a flood of pale silver fell across its floor, and into the parlors. Both rooms were
