82 The HISTORY of LONDON. Book

when the state of the state of fages for Tacklings, Carrots for Guns, and Marrow-bones for Mafts, Ballafted with Pepper, and Pitch'd or Tarr'd with Mustard, the Card and Needle being Brewis and Neats Tongues, the Steers-men Cooks, besides many Pinnaces of Pork, Mutton, and Veal, and Flying Boats, which are Turkies, Capons, Geefe, and the like, all which Swim in a Large Sea of VVine, Beer, and Ale; yet for all this we are Beaten into the Chimney-corner, and there we fit Shaking and Trembling like a Company of Cowards, that dare not fir from their Shelter; and many in the Sea-fight have been Drowned from whence fome have been taken up Dead-Drunk, then carried and Buried in a Feather-bed, where, after a Long Sleep, they may have a Refurrection, but how they will be ludged at that time they Rife, whether Damned with Cenfure, or Saved by Excufe, I cannot tell. Thus, Madam, I thought it was the part of a Friend

HIS Alms 1 Rest Pote or Ditch-tow for S IR Richard

THIS

THIS AL

Run, or rather Stands about the City WYalls, as a I renchmad Security thereof; and I being Warm Incloted in Almine and Eatily Secretian WCoath, began to take forme Fleiture to fee them Side upon the lot, infomuch as I wijthed I could, and might Side as three did, but yet I could, and might Side as three did not to the country of the c