The only man who, with all his money-getting, seems to have maintained his generous instincts in a healthy and active condition, is John W. Mackay. I have no doubt that the story about John I. Blair, of Blairstown, going into a Chicago hotel and changing his linen in the washroom because he objected to paying for a room unless he wished to stay all night, is true in every particular. Mackay, on the other hand, when he visits the hotels in New York and
